STAFFING

Que. What is staffing?

Ans.Staffing has been described as the managerial function of filling and keeping filled the positions in the organization structure. Staffing is process of recruiting right people for the right job.

The staffing function follows the planning and organising functions. After deciding what is to be done, how it is to be done and after creation of the organisation structure, the management is in a position to know the human resource requirements of the enterprise at different levels.

According to Dale Yoder "Personnel management of staffing is that phase of the management which deals with the effective control and use of manpower or human resource."

Que.Explain importance of staffing.

Ans. Importance of staffing are as follows:-

I.Filling the job roles by obtaining competent personnel:-
Staffing function is needed to fill the job position. There will be no use of job position unless and until these are occupied by employees and through staffing these job position are filled with competent employees.

2. Placing the right person in the right place:- It refers to the process of matching an employee's interests, skills, and talents to the demands of a specific profession. It is a crucial component of efficient personnel and has a big effect on how successful an organization is.

3. Growth of enterprise:- Staffing also plays a vital role in facilitating an organization's growth and development. By hiring talented and competent individuals, an organization can build a strong workforce that can help it achieve its long-term goals and objectives.

4.Optimum utilisation of human resource:- Staffing helps to ensure that the right people are hired for the job, which helps to optimize the utilization of organizational resources, including human resources. This can lead to increased productivity and efficiency.

5.Helps in competing:-An organization with a strong workforce that is well-suited for the job can compete effectively in the marketplace. A competent and motivated workforce can help an organization to innovate, adapt to changing market conditions, and deliver high-quality products and services.

6. Improves job satisfaction and morale of the employees:- Staffing also helps to ensure that employees are satisfied with their jobs and feel valued by the organization. This can lead to increased employee engagement, motivation, and retention.

7. Key to the effectiveness of other functions:- Since all management tasks are performed by employees who can only join an organization through its staffing function, no other management task can be completed without an effective staffing function.

Que. Explain Staffing as a part of Human Resource Management [HRM].

Ans.The management function's human element is handled by the staffing function. Since the effectiveness of an organisation depends on how well this function is carried out, managing the human element of an organisation is the most crucial task. A company's ability to accomplish its objectives is greatly influenced by the skill, drive, and performance of its human resource.

All managers have a direct responsibility for dealing with and choosing employees for the company. The manager's role while handling staffing is somewhat restricted.Some of these duties will be matching the right person with the right role, integrating new hires into the company, training staff and enhancing their performance, growing their skills, maintaining their morale, and safeguarding their physical and mental health.

As organisations expand and the number of employees increases, a separate department called the human resource department is formed, which has people management specialists.The number of human resource specialists and the size of this department indicate the size of the company as a whole.

The present-day human resource management concept includes the following activities:-

1. Human resource planning:- It means determining the number and types of personnel required to fill the vacant job positions of an organization.

2. Employing people:- Recruitment, selection, and placement of personnel.

3.Career growth:- Training and development of employees.

4.Performance appraisal:- It includes feedback.

5. Motivation:- By offering financial and non financial incentives.

6.Compensation:- Remuneration of employees keeping in mind their qualification and other factors.

7.Providing Socail security:- It provide welfare of people.

8.Review and audit:- It review and audit personnel policies and procedure.

Estimation of manpower
Recruitment
Selection
Introduction and placement
Training and developme
Appraisal
Promotions
Compensation
Process of staffing

1. Estimating Manpower Requirement:- The process of identifying the number and types of personnel required to meet the organization's goals is known as human resource planning. It involves evaluating the organization's existing and future needs, anticipating demand, and assessing available talent supply.

For Estimating Manpower Requirements company will take the following three steps:-

a.Workload analysis:- This requires finding number and types of employees required to perform various jobs designed in organisational structure.

b. Workforce analysis:- It means analysis existing workforce or employees already occupying the job positions and how many of them are overused or underburdened.

c.Comparision:- After doing work load analysis and workforce analysis, the manager compares both as excess of work load over workforce indicated under staffing and you need to appoint more people whereas excess of workforce over load indicates over staffing and you need to removes or transfer some employees eleswhere.

2. Recruitment:- Attracting and identifying potential personnel with the necessary skills, expertise, and talents is what recruitment entails. Creating job descriptions, posting job adverts, assessing resumes and applications, and performing all are part of the recruitment process.

3. Selection:- The process of selecting the most qualified candidates from a pool of applications generated by the recruitment process is known as selection. Additional interviews, tests and assessments, reference checks, and job offers are all part of the process.

4. Placement and Orientation:- Placement refers to the employee occupying the position or post for which the person has been selected.

Orientation is, thus, introducing the selected employee to other employees and familiarising him with the rules, regulations and policies of the organisation.It include informing new employees about the organization's policies, processes, and benefits, as well as introducing them to their coworkers and job tasks.

5.Training and Development:-Employee training and development involves providing them with the knowledge, skills, and abilities they need to do their jobs effectively. On-the-job training, coaching, mentoring, and formal training programmes are all examples of this.

Performance Appraisal:-Performance Appraisal is evaluating an employee's performance and providing feedback on areas of strength and weakness. Setting performance goals, conducting frequent performance evaluations, and recognising chances for professional advancement are all part of it.

Promotion and Career Planning:- Promotion means being placed in positions of increased responsibility.

Helping people plan and manage their careers inside the organization is what career development involves. This includes setting career objectives, offering chances for training and development, and developing career paths and possibilities for progress.

Compensation:- Compensation refers to all forms of payment made by an enterprise to their employees. e.g. salaries, incentives, commission etc.

Que. Explain Recruitment as a component of staffing.

Ans.Attracting and identifying potential personnel with the necessary skills, expertise, and talents is what recruitment involves. Creating job descriptions, posting job adverts, assessing resumes and applications, and performing initial screening interviews are all part of the process.

There are two source of recruitment:-

a.Internal Sources of Recruitment:-Internal recruitment entails promoting or transferring current employees to fill open positions within the organisation. This can be a cost-effective strategy to fill vacancies while also providing opportunity for advancement for current personnel.

The advantages of Internal Sources of Recruitment are as follows:-

1. It is economic in nature.

2. Employees are motivated to improve their performance.

3.No wastage of time on employee training and development

4. The employees are already familiar with the rules and regulations of the organization so, less chance of turnover.

5.Improve performance of employees. To get promotion employees show better performance.

6.Through transfer employees get training also in the form of job rotation.

7.Through transfer surplus employees can be shifted to other departments.

The disadvantages of Internal Sources of Recruitment are as follows:-

1.The scope of induction of fresh talent is reduced.

2.There will be limited choice.

3. Not suitable for new organisation.

4.Frequent transfers of employees may often reduce the productivity of the organization.

Types of Internal Sources of Recruitment:-

1. Transfers:- Employees that are currently employed are transferred to new roles or divisions within the company. This may be a useful strategy for finding eligible people to fill unfilled positions while also giving current workers chances to advance their careers.

2.Promotions:- Promotions involve elevating current workers to higher-level positions within the company. This can be a beneficial strategy to provide current employees with chances for career growth while also finding competent candidates for available positions.

2.External sources:- Attracting and identifying potential individuals from outside the organisation is known as external recruitment. This can involve placing job ads online, going to job fairs, and using employment boards on the internet.

Advantages of external sources are as follows:-

1.Fresh Talent:- It provides wider choice and brings new blood in the organisation.

2.Wider Choice:-The management has a wider choice in selecting the people for employment.

3.Qualified Personnel:-By using external source of recruitment the management can attract qualified and trained people to apply for the vacant jobs in the organization.

4. Latest technology knowledge:- Through campus placement organizations can get employees with the latest technological knowledge.

5. Competitive Spirit:- Through external recruitment when outsiders join the organization, this develops a competitive spirit in existing employees of the organization.

Disadvantages of external recruitment are as follows:-

1.The morale of existing employees goes down on fall.

2.The new employees may not be adjusted in the rules and regulation of the organisation which means more chance of turnover.

3. It is so expensive as to invite the outsider to apply for the job. Companies have to bear heavy burden of advertisement.

4.The employee may become lethargic.

Methods of external recruitment are as follows:-

1. Direct recruitment:- Sometimes the organisations paste notice at the gate of their office or factory or workshop stating the vacant job position . The people who are interested in those jobs walks in for interview.

2. Casual callers:- Many reputed business organizations keep a database of unsolicited applicants in their offices. This list can be screened and the best candidate is selected.

3. Advertisement:- Job advertisements involve promoting open positions via a variety of media places, including job boards, social media, and newspapers. This may be a useful strategy for reaching an enormous amount of potential applicants.

4.Employment Exchange:-Government-run employment exchanges are recognized as a reliable source of hiring for both skilled and unskilled laborer positions. In some situations, the law mandates that job openings be voluntarily reported to employment exchanges. Therefore, by acting as an intermediary between job seekers and employers, employment exchanges help with balancing the supply and demand of personnel.

5.Placement Agencies and Management consultants:-
Recruitment firms are experts in finding excellent candidates for available vacancies. This can be a useful alternative for businesses looking for specialised talents or experience.

6.Campus Consultants:-Campus recruitment involves targeting recent graduates or current college and university students. This can be an effective method of locating applicants with the requisite skills and education for entry-level roles.

7. Labour Contractors: Labour contractors maintain close contact with laborers they can provide the required number of unskilled workers at short notice. Workers are recruited through labor contractors who are themselves employees of the organization.

8. Advertising on Television:- Telecasting vacant posts over Television is gaining importance today. The detailed requirements of the job and the qualities required to do it are publicized along with the profile of the organization where the vacancy exists.

9. Web Publishing:- Nowadays, the internet is a common source of recruitment. There are websites that are specifically built and dedicated to delivering information on both job seekers and job openings. In truth, websites are frequently accessed by both prospective employees and organisations looking for qualified candidates.

10.Recommendations of Employees:- Employee referrals involve encouraging current employees to refer qualified candidates for open positions. This can be an effective way to find quality candidates while also leveraging the networks and relationships of current employees

Difference between Internal and External Source of Recruitment

S. No.	Point of difference	Internal recruitment	External recruitment
1.	Meaning	Internal recruitment means making use of existing staff to fill up the vacant job positions in the organisation.	External recruitment means making use of new personnel or outsiders to fill up the vacant job positions in the organisation.
2.	Time	It is less time-consuming.	It is more time consuming.
3.	Economy	This process is more economical as it does not involve any cost of searching external sources.	This process is costly as vacancies have to be notified in newspapers, magazines, etc.
4.	Quality	There is a limited choice so better quality may not be assumed.	It provides a wider choice and the best quality is assumed.
5.	Morale of the employees	This method boosts up the morale of the employees because existing staff gets chance of promotion.	This method brings down the morale of the employees as they do not get chance of growth and development.

Que. Explain selection as an element of staffing.

Ans. Selection is the process of identifying and choosing the best person out of a number of prospective candidates for a job.

Candidates must pass a series of employment exams and interviews in order to be considered for the position. At Many are eliminated at each stage, and only a few advance to the next stage until the right type is found. The screening of applications could be the first step in the process. It may continue even after the candidate has accepted and joined the company. This is because the selection process, like any other managerial choice, requires a judgment about the candidate's performance potential.

Process of selection:-

The important steps in the process of selection are as follows:-

1.Preliminary Screening:- Based on the information provided in the application forms, preliminary screening enables the manager in eliminating unqualified or unfit job applicants. Preliminary interviews help in the rejection of misfits for reasons that did not appear on the application forms.

2.Selection Tests:-An employment test is a technique (either a paper and pencil test or an exercise) used to assess specific skills of employees. These traits extend from aptitudes like physical dexterity to IQ and personality.

Important tests used for the selection of employees are as follows:-

a.Intelligence Tests:- This is one of the most important psychological tests for determining an individual's intelligence level. It is a measure of a person's learning ability or ability to make decisions and make judgments.

b. Aptitude Tests:- It evaluates an individual's ability to learn new abilities. It indicates a person's ability to grow. Such tests are good indicators of a person's future success.

c.Personality Tests:-Personality tests reveal information on a person's emotions, reactions, maturity, and value system, among other things. These evaluations look at the overall personality. As a result, they are challenging to develop and apply.

d.Trade Tests:-These tests evaluate the individual's current abilities. They evaluate the level of understanding and ability in a profession or technical training. The main difference between an aptitude test and a trade test is that the first evaluates the potential to acquire skills while the latter evaluates the actual skills acquired.

e.Interest Tests:-very person is more interested in one job than another. Interest tests are used to determine a person's pattern of interests or participation.

3. Employment Interviews:- An interview is a formal, in-depth talk held in order to evaluate an applicant's suitability for the job. The interviewer's function is to gather information, whereas the interviewee's role is to deliver it. In today's world, the person being interviewed also seeks information from the interviewer.

4. Reference Checks:- Many employers request the names, addresses, and phone numbers of references in order to verify the information and learn more about an applicant. Previous employers, known individuals, teachers, and university professors can provide references.

5.Selection Decisions:- The ultimate decision must be made from among those who pass the examinations, interviews, and reference checks. Because he or she is responsible for the new employee's performance, the views of the concerned manager will be taken into account in the final selection.

6.Medical/Physical Examination:- The candidate is needed to take a medical fitness test after the selection decision and before the employment offer is given. After the medical check, the candidate who is certified fit receives a job offer.

7.Job Offer:- The next phase in the selection process is to make a job offer to applicants who have cleared all previous hurdles.A job offer is made via a letter of appointment/confirmation of acceptance. In most cases, such a letter includes a deadline for the appointee to report for service. The appointee must be given adequate time to report.

8. Contract of Employment:- After the job offer is made and the candidate accepts it, the employer and the candidate must sign certain documents. The attestation form is one such document. This form provides crucial information about the candidate, which is authenticated and testified to by him or her. The attestation form will serve as a permanent record for future reference. It is also necessary to design an employment contract. The basic material that should be included in a written employment contract will vary depending on the level of the position, however, the following checklists outline the typical headings: Job Description, Duties, and Responsibilities Date when continuous employment begins and the basis for calculating service, pay rates, allowances, hours worked, leave rules, sickness, etc.

Que. Explain Training and Development as an element of staffing.

Training:- Training is any method of learning.employees' aptitudes, talents, and ability to accomplish specified tasks Jobs are being added. It is a process of acquiring new skills and applying knowledge. It aims to improve their current job performance or to prepare them for any future job.

Development:- Employee development refers to the learning opportunities provided to help them grow. It includes not only activities that increase job performance, but also those that promote personality development, assist individuals in maturing and realising their full potential, and help them become not simply effective employees, but better men and women.

The benefits of Training and Development to the Organisation are as follows:-

1. Reduce learning time:- When compared to untrained employees, trained employees learn the job faster. As a result, waste is reduced and productivity is increased.

2. Better performance:- The performance of trained employees is always superior to that of untrained employees since training programmes improve their traits and capabilities and people gain experience working on the job before they are actually allocated the job. This boosts their performance and efficiency.

3.Attitude formation:- The goal of training and development is to mould people so that they may create a favourable attitude towards the organisation and to motivate them to be ready to take the initiative, which will result in stronger employee support and cooperation.

4.Aids to help in solving operational problem:- While carrying out various activities in the organisation, the organisation encounters a variety of issues, such as absenteeism, resource waste, employee dissatisfaction, and so on. These operational problems in the organisation can be avoided or eliminated through supervisory level training because supervisors are trained to improve superior-subordinate relationships and to encourage and motivate their subordinates.

5. Managing manpower need:- Some organizations have specialized production procedures and no ready staff. In that instance, the organization hires untrained individuals and trains them with the necessary skills based on the needs of the organization. They solve long-standing manpower shortages through training.

6. Helps to adapt to changes:- Training helps the employees to adapt to environmental changes.

Benefits of Traning and Development to the Employees are as follows:-

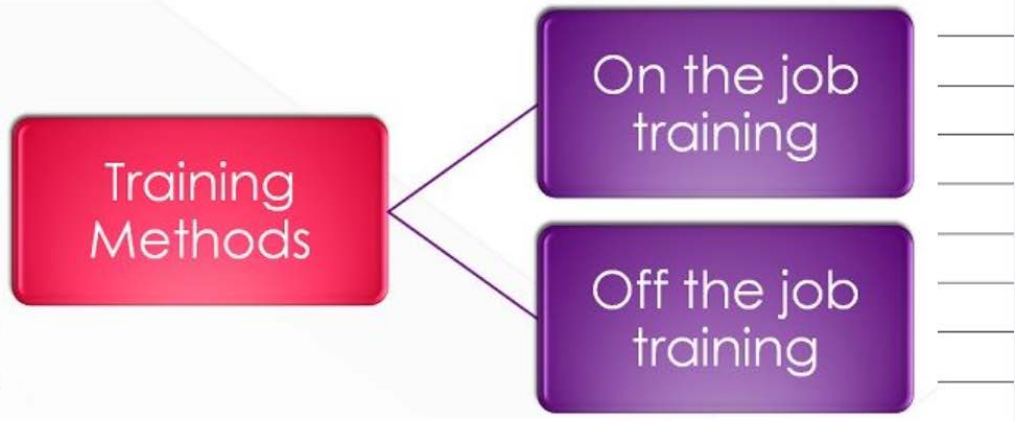

1.Better career:- Improved skills and knowledge due to training lead to better career of the individual.

2.Earnig more:- Increased performance by the individual help him to earn more.

3.Boost up the morale of employees:-Training increases the satisfaction and morale of employees.

4.Less chance of accidents:- Training makes the employee more efficient to handle machines.Thus, less prone to accidents.

There are two Methods of training:-

1. On-the-job training:- On-the-job training (OJT) is a method of obtaining new skills and knowledge by completing tasks and duties in the workplace. It typically includes a new employee working under the supervision and guidance of an experienced colleague who gives hands-on training and support as the new employee learns how to perform their job obligations.

Common techniques of on-the-job training are as follows:-

a.Apprenticeship Programme:-Apprenticeship courses place trainees under the supervision of a master worker.These are intended to help you improve your skills. People wishing to enter skilled occupations, These apprentices are trainees who spend a set amount of time working with an experienced guide or trainer. Trainees are given a consistent period of training during which both fast and slow learners are grouped together. Slow learners may need more instruction.

b.Coaching:-As a coach, the superior advises and instructs the learner in this approach. The coach or counselor establishes mutually agreed-upon goals, proposes how to accomplish these goals, reviews the trainees' progress on a regular basis, and suggests modifications in behaviour and performance as needed.The trainee works directly with amsenior manager, who is fully responsible for the trainee's coaching.

c.Internship Training:-It is a working together training programme in which educational institutions and commercial enterprises collaborate.Selected candidates continue their studies on a regular basis for the specified time frame. They also work in an industry or an office to gain practical knowledge and skills.

d.Job Rotation:-This type of training involves transferring the trainee from one department to another or from one position to another. This allows the trainee to develop a better grasp of all aspects of the business and how the organization runs as a whole. The trainee is completely involved in the department's operations and has the opportunity to put her own aptitude and ability to the test. Job rotation allows trainees to connect with other staff, enhancing eventual departmental collaboration.

2. Off the job-training:- Off-the-job training is a means of acquiring new skills and knowledge outside of the workplace. It entails taking classes or attending training sessions, which are usually held in a classroom or another off-site venue. Off-the-job training can be delivered by an external trainer or organisation or by the company itself.

a.Class Room Lectures/Conferences:-The lecture or conference style is ideal for providing specific knowledge, rules, procedures, or approaches. The inclusion of audio-visuals or demonstrations can often make a formal classroom lecture more fascinating, increase recall, and provide a vehicle for clarifying more difficult concepts.

b.Films:-They can supply information and openly show skills that other techniques cannot easily represent. In some circumstances, it is a particularly effective strategy when used in between conference talks.

c.Case Study:- Case studies are drawn from actual organizational experiences and seek to reflect real difficulties that managers have experienced as accurately as possible. Trainees examine the examples to establish problems, assess causes, devise alternative solutions, choose what they feel to be the best option and put it into action.

d.Computer Modelling:- It simulates the work environment by programming a computer to replicate some of the realities of the job, allowing learning to occur without the danger or high costs that would be incurred if a mistake were made in a real-life circumstance.

e.Vestibule Training:-Employees are trained on the equipment they will be operating, although the training takes place away from the actual work floor. In a classroom, actual work environments are replicated, and employees use the same documents, files, and equipment. This is frequently done when staff are required to operate complex machinery and equipment.

f.Programmed Instruction:-This approach includes a planned and anticipated learning of specific skills or broad knowledge. Information is divided into understandable parts, which are then properly structured to build a logical and ordered educational package, ranging from simple to complex. The student works his or her way through these units by answering questions or filling in the spaces.

Difference between Recruitment and Selection

Difference between Recruitment and Selection

S.No.	Point of difference or basis	Recruitment	Selection
1.	Meaning	It is a process of searching suitable candidates to fill up vacant jobs position.	It is a process of screening and selecting the most eligible candidates and offering them jobs.
2.	Stage	Recruitment proceeds the staffing function.	Staffing always starts where recruitment ends.
3.	Nature	It is a positive process as more and more candidates are induced to apply for the job.	It is a negative process and more candidates are rejected than the number of selected candidates.
4.	Contract of service	There is no contractual relation created.	Selection involves contract of service between employer and employee.

Difference between Training and Development

Difference between Training and Development

S.No.	Point of difference	Training	Development
1.	Concept/depth of knowledge	Training is concerned with teaching technical skill only.	Development is concerned in teaching technical, human and conceptual skill.
2.	Suitability	Training is more suitable for technical staff.	Development is more suitable for managerial staff.
3.	Nature	Training concentrates on developing the skill already possessed by the employees.	Development concentrates on development of hidden qualities of the employees.
4.	Methods used	In training on-the-job methods of training are preferred.	In development off the job methods of training are preferred.
5.	Focus/purpose	Training focuses on present requirements of the organisation.	Development focuses on present as well as future requirements of the organisation.
6.	Time	It is a short term process.	It is a long term process.